not a whit daunted by the unfavorable reception of his last remark. "Can we picnic on the Red Pike? It would be jolly fun.' The host hummed and hawed; he rather preferred an open-air entertainment at a place accessible in an open carriage. But if you have a house among the mountains, up them you must go. It made her cheeks tingle with shame and anger. Proud and highspirited herself, good sense of the kind Mrs. Godwin meant was not in high esteem with her. And, alas, the insinuation chimed in with other things. Walter Losford was hardly one to please a romantic girl at first sight. With a quick shudder he passed his hand across his eyes and recoiled, white to the lips. "I can't get it for you," he said hoarsely falling back, while the others looked at one another in astonishment.

Losford soon had to check them, and assist the foreman to proper precautions as they worked. In time more men flocked from neighboring pits to the spot, and the task was carried on by gangs. Notwithstanding Mr. and Mrs. Godwin's entreatles, the poor girl most concerned would not leave; and hour after hour, while seemingly countless loads of earth were wheeled or carried from the deepening entrance, she walked to and fro, or lay with Gertrude's hand in hers on the wraps laid in a corner formed by gazed at as he came from the darkness into the blaze of the fire and deposited his load! Suddenly the tools ceased; a barrow on its way out stopped inside the entrance. The crowd outside drew close and breathed more quickly, and women hid their faces as the sound of voices low murmuring came from the passage. Then a little crowd of men pressed out, and in their midst Walter Losford, stained and ragged, with the boy's form in his arms. He laid him quickly on the wraps by the women.
